阅读理解（记叙文） The Day I Lost My Dog in the Park

① Dou Dou is not a big dog. He has short brown fur, one white paw, and eyes that seem to smile whenever he sees me. Mother says I have cared for him since I was seven. Last Saturday afternoon, the weather was bright and the wind was soft, so I took him to Sunshine Park. I did not know, when I closed the door, that the simplest walk could turn into the longest hour of my life.

③ My heart began to beat very fast. I walked into the bushes and called him again and again. Nothing — only the sound of leaves moving. I ran to the lake, to the flower garden, and even to the children's playground. I asked an old man, "Have you seen a small brown dog?" He shook his head kindly. I asked a group of girls; they only looked at each other. Tears began to push against my eyes. I thought of how he slept under my desk every night, and my chest felt tight.

⑤ "Is he yours?" the woman asked. I nodded, almost unable to speak. "He came over quietly," she said, "so I gave him some clean water. He looks happy enough." I said "Thank you" three times, each time louder than the last. Dou Dou walked to me, his tail shaking. I did not scold him. I only knelt down, put my cheek against his soft fur, and felt his small heart beating next to mine.

⑥ On the way home, Dou Dou walked close to me, his red leash safely back around his neck. I kept looking at him, afraid he might disappear again. That night, I wrote in my diary: "Today I lost Dou Dou for one hour. In that hour, I learned something. Sometimes we only understand how much we love somebody or some little being when they are not by our side. After that, we should be a little more careful, and a little more grateful, every day."
