阅读理解（记叙文） The Old Man at the Silent Bus Stop

① It was a cold Tuesday in late November, and the sky had that grey, heavy look that means snow is near. I had just finished my piano lesson and was walking to the bus stop near Nanhu Park, a thick scarf pulled up to my nose. The stop is usually busy after school, but that afternoon it was strangely quiet. Only one other person was there — a small, thin old man in a brown coat, sitting very still on the metal bench.

② I glanced at the board. My bus, the 17, was due in twelve minutes. I took out my phone and looked down. When I looked up again, I noticed that the old man had not moved at all. He was staring at the road, but his eyes were not following any car. I suddenly felt something was wrong, but I was a little shy, so I did not speak.

③ Five minutes passed. Then, slowly, the old man opened his mouth and whispered something. I could not hear him clearly. "Sorry?" I said, stepping closer. He looked up at me, and his eyes were wet. "I think… I think I can't remember where I live," he said in a small voice. My heart gave a soft, surprised jump.

⑤ For a moment I did not know what to do. Then I remembered a poster on the wall of our classroom — the one about helping lost elderly people with memory problems. Step 1: stay calm. Step 2: keep the person warm. Step 3: call the community service line. I took off my scarf and put it around him. He looked surprised, as if no one had given him anything for a long time, and he said, "Thank you, little sister." I smiled, although my own neck began to feel the cold.

⑥ I dialled 12349, the community help number. A calm woman asked a few short questions and told me to stay where I was. Fifteen minutes later, a small white car arrived, and a young officer in a bright jacket stepped out. He spoke to Mr Li gently, looked at the biscuits and the button, and smiled. "I think I know this uncle," he said. "We had a report from his daughter an hour ago — she couldn't find him."

softly. "She would want you to have it." I tried to say no, but he had already gone. I stood at the stop, holding the button, my eyes suddenly hot.

⑧ I missed three buses that afternoon. When I finally got home, the sky was dark and a few snowflakes had begun to fall. My mother asked why I was late, and I showed her the small green button on my palm. She did not say anything for a moment. Then she put the button into a little glass box on the shelf — next to my first lost tooth. "Some things," she said, "are too important to keep in a pocket."
