10-10 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文） The Pair of Glasses I Accidentally Broke

① My deskmate, Wei, was new to our class this autumn. He was quiet, smart, and very careful with his things. He had one small treasure: a pair of thin round glasses with silver frames. His grandfather, a retired village teacher, had bought them for him in the summer holiday. Wei had told me once, almost shyly, that the old man saved a whole month of pension money for those frames.

② One Friday afternoon, we were putting chairs on top of desks to clean the floor. Our corner of the classroom was crowded. As I lifted the last chair, my elbow caught something on the desk — Wei's glasses. They slipped off the edge, hit the tile floor with a short, clear tic, and bounced. When I picked them up, the right lens had a long silver crack running from corner to corner. One side arm was bent.

③ My face burned. Wei was at the classroom door, carrying a bucket of water. He had seen nothing yet. For a tiny second, a quiet, dark voice whispered in my head: "Put them back. Say you don't know. His seat is on the window side — he might think he knocked them off himself." Nobody was watching. The voice was very convincing.

④ But another voice, smaller and slower, said: "Think about his grandfather." I closed my hand around the glasses and walked straight to Wei.

⑤ "Wei," I said. My throat was dry. "I broke your glasses. I'm so sorry." I opened my hand. His eyes widened. I could see him understand in slow stages: first surprise, then a kind of pain, then — and this was hardest to watch — a careful, grown-up quiet. He took the glasses, looked at them, and put them in his school bag. "Okay, Xiaolu," he said. "Thank you for telling me." That was all.

⑥ That night I told my parents. My mother listened without speaking. My father, usually a very quiet man, said only: "How much?" I didn't know. The next morning, Saturday, my father and I walked to the optical shop near Wei's home. The owner looked at the broken pair, told us a new lens would be 180 yuan, and a new frame 220 — a lot for my family, and much more than my month's pocket money.

⑦ We bought both. My father paid for the frame; I would slowly pay back the 180 yuan for the lens from my weekly pocket money — seven weeks of no ice cream, no comic books, no extra rice balls on Friday. On Saturday afternoon, I took the new glasses to Wei's flat and handed him a small envelope. Inside was a note: "I will give back the ice-cream money my classmates usually pay for. I won't say you broke them." He read it and laughed, for the first time in the whole story.

⑧ On Monday morning, Wei wore his new glasses in class. At lunch, he quietly pushed a small orange towards my tray. "I owe you an orange," he said, smiling. "For telling me."

⑨ Since then I have thought many times about that quiet dark voice in my head on Friday. I had never really believed I was a dishonest person until that moment; I had just never been alone in a room with a broken pair of glasses. What I learned was simple but new: being honest is not mainly a feeling; it is a small decision made quickly, before the easy lie has time to grow.

注释： deskmate 同桌；lens 镜片；frame 镜框；optical shop 眼镜店；pocket money 零花钱

根据短文内容，选择最佳答案。

1. How did Wei get his silver-framed glasses?

A. He bought them himself.
B. His grandfather, a retired village teacher, bought them with a whole month of pension money during the summer holiday.
C. They were a prize from a school competition.
D. His mother gave them as a birthday gift.

2. How did the writer break the glasses?

A. She threw them on purpose.
B. She sat on them during a test.
C. While putting a chair on a desk, her elbow caught the glasses and they fell on the tile floor.
D. They fell out of the school bus window.

3. What was the "quiet dark voice" in the writer's head (Paragraph 3)?

A. A real person standing behind her.
B. A thought telling her to hide the broken glasses and let Wei think he had knocked them off himself.
C. A message on her phone.
D. Her teacher calling out her name.

4. How did the writer finally pay for the broken glasses?

A. Wei's family paid for everything.
B. The school bought a new pair for free.
C. Her father paid for the frame; she slowly paid back the 180 yuan for the lens from her weekly pocket money over seven weeks.
D. The optical shop gave her the glasses for free.

5. What lesson does the writer most want readers to take from this story?

A. Never bring glasses to school.
B. If nobody sees you, you can always lie.
C. Being honest is not mainly a feeling — it is a small decision made quickly, before the easy lie has time to grow.
D. Breaking other people's things is always cheap.

答案与解析

1.
【答案】B
【题型】细节理解题
【定位】第①段 "his grandfather, a retired village teacher, had bought them ... the old man saved a whole month of pension money for those frames."
【解析】爷爷用一个月养老金为他买眼镜。A、C、D 均不符。故选 B。

2.
【答案】C
【题型】细节理解题
【定位】第②段 "As I lifted the last chair, my elbow caught something on the desk — Wei's glasses. They slipped off the edge, hit the tile floor"
【解析】抬椅时胳膊肘碰到眼镜致其坠地。A、B、D 均错。故选 C。

3.
【答案】B
【题型】推理判断题
【定位】第③段 "Put them back. Say you don't know. His seat is on the window side — he might think he knocked them off himself."
【解析】那是让她掩饰错误的内心念头。A、C、D 均非心理描写。故选 B。

4.
【答案】C
【题型】细节理解题
【定位】第⑦段 "My father paid for the frame; I would slowly pay back the 180 yuan for the lens ... seven weeks of no ice cream"
【解析】父亲付镜框，自己用零花钱还镜片钱。A、B、D 均错。故选 C。

5.
【答案】C
【题型】主旨/写作意图题
【定位】第⑨段 "being honest is not mainly a feeling; it is a small decision made quickly, before the easy lie has time to grow."
【解析】作者直接点明主旨。A、B、D 与原文立场相反或荒谬。故选 C。