阅读理解（议论文） Should Teachers and Parents Keep a "Quiet Window" After 9 p.m.?

① A few weeks ago, my mother showed me a screenshot. It was our class group chat at 22:18 on a Tuesday: three teachers, two parents, one angry voice note, and a list of tomorrow's extra homework. I counted the messages from 21:00 until midnight: 79. We were all, in a way, working an extra shift — quietly, silently, under the covers. That night I asked my mother a serious question: "Why does 9 p.m. not really mean 9 p.m. in our school?" I do not know the full answer. But I do believe one idea: after 9 p.m., a school group chat should enter a "quiet window" for about 12 hours, without new assignments or urgent announcements.

② The strongest argument is sleep. Doctors across China have said again and again that middle-school students need 9 to 9.5 hours of sleep each night. In reality, many of my classmates sleep less than seven. A late-night message "Please correct question 18 before tomorrow morning" is, scientifically, a small alarm clock for the whole family — parents check, worry, wake the student, and the quiet brain misses one more half-hour of repair time. Over a month, that is ten lost hours. Over a term, a whole night.

③ Second, a "quiet window" respects teachers too. A 9 p.m. message from the form teacher to our class often starts another chain: more parents asking "Has my child finished?"; more pictures of half-done homework; more explanations. In the end, the teacher herself rarely goes to sleep before eleven. Teachers are also parents, also daughters, also patients of winter coughs. A school that protects students' rest also protects its teachers'. A tired teacher in Grade 7 becomes a less patient teacher by Grade 9.

deserve real answers, not quick dismissals. A sudden thunderstorm that changes tomorrow's sports event; a child whose temperature has just risen to 39 °C; a rule change from the school district office — these are genuine emergencies and should not be held back.

⑥ The answer is not to forbid all messages, but to change the habit. Three simple rules can solve 90% of the noise. First, non-urgent notices (homework, reminders, study tips) should be posted before 21:00, or — if missed — the next morning by 07:30. Second, genuine emergencies should use a clear word at the start, such as "URGENT" or "急", so parents know when to check and when to rest. Third, teachers can turn on a scheduled-send function: write at 23:00 if the idea comes, but send at 07:30 the next day. Technology already allows this in 2027; only the habit needs updating.

⑧ A classroom is not a factory; a family is not a 24-hour help centre. After nine at night, children should close the day and be allowed to be children again. Teachers should close their computers and be allowed to be human again. Parents should put down their phones and, across the pillow, talk about something small and funny — a joke from the road, a funny face from the dog, a recipe for the weekend. A "quiet window" is not silence. It is the breathing space that lets our kindness last until morning. That is the kind of school I would like Lihua to be.

根据短文内容，选择最佳答案。

1. What is the writer's main proposal?

A. Teachers should send homework messages only at 2 a.m.
B. After 9 p.m., the school group chat should enter a "quiet window" for about 12 hours, without new assignments or urgent announcements.
C. Parents should remove the school group chat.
D. Students should reply to every message instantly.

2. Why does Paragraph ② argue that late-night messages harm SLEEP?

A. Because parents sleep in separate rooms.
B. Because the message acts like a small alarm clock for the whole family — parents check, worry, wake the student — and the student loses important brain-repair time.
C. Because students prefer talking to chatting.
D. Because schools are too loud.

3. Which of the following does the writer mention as a GENUINE emergency in Paragraph ⑤?

A. A piece of homework the teacher forgot.
B. A sudden thunderstorm that changes tomorrow's sports event; a child with a fever of 39 °C; a rule change from the school district office.
C. A classmate posting a funny cartoon.
D. A new word in the vocabulary list.

4. Which is NOT one of the writer's three "simple rules" in Paragraph ⑥?

A. Non-urgent notices should be posted before 21:00 or by the next morning 07:30.
B. Emergencies should start with a clear "URGENT" word.
C. Teachers can use a scheduled-send function: write at 23:00 but send at 07:30.
D. Parents should delete every message at midnight.

5. What is the meaning of the writer's final sentence in Paragraph ⑧: "A 'quiet window' is not silence. It is the breathing space that lets our kindness last until morning"?*

A. Everyone should stay silent after 9 p.m.
B. Kindness gets tired too; a quiet window gives teachers, parents and students a pause so their kindness survives the next day.
C. Schools should never communicate.
D. Parents should shout at children at 9 p.m.

答案与解析

1.
【答案】B
【题型】主旨大意题
【定位】第①段末 "after 9 p.m., a school group chat should enter a 'quiet window' for about 12 hours"
