12-20 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文） The Saturday I Returned a Lost Wallet at Nanping Subway Station

① On Saturday afternoon, 18 December 2027, at 16:05, I was standing on the down-escalator of Nanping Subway Station, Exit B, on my way home from my English weekend class, when a small, flat object slid slowly past my left shoe and came to rest between the silver steps of the escalator. I looked down. It was a dark brown leather wallet, perhaps eight centimetres wide, a little bit worn at the corners, caught on the very edge of a silver step so that it was about to go down into the mechanism at the bottom. In three more steps of the escalator, it would be sucked into the gears. I bent quickly — the way my mother had taught me to bend on an escalator, knees first, not waist first — and picked it up. My fingers trembled a little. I did not open it. I stepped off the escalator at the bottom and walked straight toward the yellow-vested staff member at the exit gate. Her name tag said Ms Lu. She was about thirty.

② "Aunt Lu," I said, holding the wallet up carefully with both hands, "I found this on the escalator. I did not open it. It was going to fall into the gears." She looked at me. She looked at the wallet. Her face became both serious and kind at the same time. She took out a small black walkie-talkie and said three careful sentences to someone. Then she led me to the Lost-and-Found counter on the west side of the gate. "Little girl," she said, "thank you. Come. We will open it together, calmly, with two witnesses. This is the rule."

③ A tall man in a dark blue railway uniform, Ms Lu's shift leader, came over. Ms Lu opened the small glass cabinet under the counter, took out a white paper form, and laid it flat between us. Only then did she open the wallet, very slowly, with me and the shift leader watching. Inside: one ID card (the photo showed a friendly-looking man, Mr Huang Daming, 45 years old), three bank cards, ¥680 in small notes (in one hundred, fifty, and twenty yuan denominations), a crumpled single photo of a little girl about six years old (probably his daughter), and, tucked behind the ID, a small folded pink paper that looked important — the edges were thin from being re-folded many times.

④ Ms Lu wrote on the form, in careful blue ink, every item, exactly as I was watching: 1 ID card · 3 bank cards · ¥680 in cash · 1 family photo · 1 small folded pink paper — then added, below, "Found by Grade-8 student from Lihua Middle School, 16:05, on Exit B escalator by Yiran (age 14)." She asked me to write, next to her handwriting, a single line in my own hand: "I did not touch the contents of the wallet before the counter opened it." I signed my name. I felt, quietly, the unfamiliar small dignity of a person being trusted.

⑤ The shift leader tried to call Mr Huang's number, printed on the back of his staff card. No answer — perhaps his phone was also in the lost wallet. Ms Lu then made a short announcement over the station's public speakers, in a calm clear voice: "Passenger Huang Daming, please come to the Lost-and-Found counter near Exit B. A wallet has been handed in." She repeated it twice. I stood on a small red rubber mat behind the counter, drinking a small paper cup of warm water that Ms Lu had gently handed me, watching the thin crowd of winter passengers move past.

⑥ Fourteen minutes went by. I was about to tell Ms Lu I should go home — my father would be worried by 17:00 — when, from Exit A, a tall man in a grey coat came running toward the counter. His face was white. His hair was slightly wet with snow. I recognised him instantly from the ID photo: it was Mr Huang. He did not stop running until he reached the counter. He placed both hands on the counter edge. He was breathing hard. He said, in a half-broken voice, "My wallet — please — my wallet — I — oh my."

⑦ Ms Lu asked him three careful verification questions, slowly: "Can you tell me, sir, roughly how much cash was inside?" He said, his eyes thinking, "Six hundred... eighty. I think. In notes, mostly fifties." Correct. "Besides bank cards, was there any photo inside?" He said, his voice breaking a little, "One photo. My daughter Jiajia. She was six in the photo. She turned fifteen last month." Correct. "And is there any other paper inside that is important to you?" He was silent for a moment. Then he said, very quietly, "A small folded pink paper. It is — it is my late wife's handwriting. She wrote it for me before — before she left us. I carry it everywhere. Please tell me it is there." Ms Lu opened the wallet. She showed him the small folded pink paper. His whole body, standing at the counter, suddenly trembled. He placed his forehead on his own fist for about ten seconds. He did not cry. He did not speak. I did not move.

⑧ When he lifted his face again, he looked for me. The shift leader pointed quietly. Mr Huang walked the three small steps toward me, took a careful step, bowed to me once — not a small polite bow, but a full, slow, serious bow of the waist — and said, in a steady voice, "Child, thank you. Thank you for not opening the paper. Thank you for bringing the wallet to this counter in thirty seconds. Thank you for being fourteen years old and for noticing what was about to be eaten by a machine." Then he reached into his coat pocket, took out his own phone, and asked, "May I, at least, know the name of your school and your class, so that I may write a short, calm letter to your teacher?" I nodded. I gave him my school and my class.

⑨ He did not offer me money, nor did he try to hand me a red envelope. He only stood beside me and Ms Lu at the counter for three more minutes, filling in the "owner" section of the white paper form. He signed it. He wrote down his phone number twice — once for the station, once for me, "only for if you, Yiran, ever need a careful friend of your family in this city." Then he walked slowly, with the wallet in both hands, toward Exit

A. Before he reached the stairs, he turned once more, looked back at me, and lifted his hand in a small quiet wave. The small pink paper, I could see, was still safely inside his wallet.

⑩ At 17:02, Ms Lu walked me to Exit B herself. She said, as we reached the last few steps up to the winter sky, "Yiran, today you did a small thing. But a small thing, done by a fourteen-year-old in thirty seconds, can hold together a whole man's memory of his wife. Do not forget this. And do not boast about it either." I did not know what to say. I only nodded. Above us, the winter sky was turning a deep orange. It was the most beautiful ride home I had ever had.

注释： escalator 自动扶梯；walkie-talkie 对讲机；denomination 面额；crumpled 皱的；verification 核实；dignity 尊严

根据短文内容，选择最佳答案。

1. According to Paragraph ①, exactly what did the writer see on the escalator, and how did she pick it up?

A. At 16:05 on Saturday 18 December 2027, while standing on the down-escalator of Nanping Subway Station Exit B on her way home from an English weekend class, she saw a dark brown leather wallet about eight centimetres wide, a little worn at the corners, caught on the very edge of a silver step and about to be sucked into the gears at the bottom in three more steps; she bent quickly the way her mother had taught her to bend on an escalator — knees first, not waist first — and picked it up.
B. She saw the wallet on a bench and opened it immediately.
C. She saw a wallet on the street outside the station and threw it to a passerby.
D. She saw a wallet inside a train and alarmed the whole carriage.

2. How did Ms Lu, the staff member, handle the found wallet at the Lost-and-Found counter (Paragraphs ②—④)?

A. Ms Lu opened the wallet alone in a back room and took a photo.
B. Ms Lu led the writer to the Lost-and-Found counter on the west side of the gate and said "We will open it together, calmly, with two witnesses — this is the rule"; a tall man in dark blue railway uniform (her shift leader) came over, and only then was the wallet opened slowly, revealing 1 ID card (Mr Huang Daming, 45), 3 bank cards, ¥680 in small notes (100s, 50s, 20s), a crumpled photo of a little girl about six, and a small folded pink paper; Ms Lu wrote every item on a white paper form, noting "Found by Grade-8 student from Lihua Middle School, 16:05, on Exit B escalator by Yiran (age 14)", and asked the writer to sign in her own hand: "I did not touch the contents of the wallet before the counter opened it".
C. Ms Lu kept the wallet for a year and then threw it away.
D. Ms Lu gave the wallet to a stranger without any paperwork.

3. What did the shift leader do to find the owner, and how did Mr Huang eventually arrive (Paragraphs ⑤ and ⑥)?

A. The shift leader posted on social media and waited for one week.
B. The shift leader tried to call the number printed on the back of Mr Huang's staff card but there was no answer; Ms Lu then made a short public-speaker announcement in a calm clear voice — "Passenger Huang Daming, please come to the Lost-and-Found counter near Exit B. A wallet has been handed in." — and repeated it twice; fourteen minutes later, Mr Huang came running from Exit A, his face white, hair slightly wet with snow, stopping only when he reached the counter, placing both hands on the counter edge and saying in a half-broken voice "My wallet — please — my wallet — I — oh my."
C. The shift leader gave up and told Mr Huang to come another day.
D. Mr Huang arrived after three days by email.

4. What were the three verification questions Ms Lu asked Mr Huang, and what was the significance of the small folded pink paper (Paragraph ⑦)?

A. Ms Lu asked about weather, food, and bus routes; the pink paper was a bus ticket.
B. Ms Lu asked about address, phone, and ID; the pink paper was a shopping list.
C. Ms Lu asked (1) "Can you tell me, sir, roughly how much cash was inside?" — he said "Six hundred... eighty, in notes, mostly fifties" (correct); (2) "Besides bank cards, was there any photo inside?" — he said "One photo. My daughter Jiajia. She was six in the photo. She turned fifteen last month." (correct); and (3) "And is there any other paper inside that is important to you?" — he said, very quietly, "A small folded pink paper. It is my late wife's handwriting. She wrote it for me before she left us. I carry it everywhere. Please tell me it is there." When Ms Lu showed him the paper, his whole body trembled, he placed his forehead on his own fist for about ten seconds, did not cry or speak.
D. Ms Lu asked no questions and handed over the wallet immediately.

5. What did Mr Huang say to the writer, what did Ms Lu say as the writer left, and what is the overall lesson?

A. Mr Huang gave the writer a big red envelope and told her to boast about the deed at school.
B. Mr Huang walked three small steps toward the writer, bowed once — not a small polite bow but a full, slow, serious bow of the waist — and said "Child, thank you. Thank you for not opening the paper. Thank you for bringing the wallet to this counter in thirty seconds. Thank you for being fourteen years old and for noticing what was about to be eaten by a machine"; he offered no money and no red envelope, only wrote down his phone number twice, "once for the station, once for you, only for if you, Yiran, ever need a careful friend of your family in this city"; and at 17:02 Ms Lu said "Yiran, today you did a small thing. But a small thing, done by a fourteen-year-old in thirty seconds, can hold together a whole man's memory of his wife. Do not forget this. And do not boast about it either." Above them, the winter sky was turning deep orange, and it was the most beautiful ride home the writer had ever had.

C. Mr Huang criticised the writer for being too slow.
D. Ms Lu refused to walk the writer to the exit.

答案与解析

1.
【答案】A
【题型】细节理解题
【定位】第①段发现钱包
【解析】"16:05 / Nanping B / 扶梯边缘 / 膝盖先弯 / 三步后被吞"直引。B、C、D 均错。故选 A。

2.
【答案】B
【题型】细节理解题
【定位】第②③④段柜台流程
【解析】"两证人规则 / 680 元 / 女儿照片 / 粉纸 / 未触物内容签字"直引。A、C、D 均错。故选 B。

3.
【答案】B
【题型】细节理解题
【定位】第⑤⑥段广播 + 14 分钟
【解析】"单位电话无应答 / 广播两次 / A 口雪湿头发 / 喘粗气"直引。A、C、D 均错。故选 B。

4.
【答案】C
【题型】细节理解题
【定位】第⑦段三核实 + 粉纸意义
【解析】"680 / 女儿照片 / 妻子遗笔 / 全身颤抖 10 秒"直引。A、B、D 均错。故选 C。

5.
【答案】B
【题型】主旨大意题 / 推理判断题
【定位】第⑧⑩段黄先生鞠躬 + Ms Lu 结语
【解析】"全腰鞠躬 / 未送红包 / 一电话给朋友 / 小事能托住整个记忆 / 勿夸"主旨。A、C、D 均偏离。故选 B。