中考英语完形填空：新同桌

完形填空原文

At the beginning of the new term, our teacher rearranged the seats. I was a little unhappy because I had to 1 my old deskmate, Lily. We had been sitting together for a whole year and became very good friends. Now my new deskmate was a boy called Zhang Wei.

Zhang Wei was very quiet. He hardly talked to anyone in class. During the first few days, we barely 2 a word. I thought he was unfriendly and did not want to be bothered. I even complained to Lily, "I wish I could sit with you again. My new deskmate is so 3."

One day, I forgot to bring my pencil case. I was worried because we had a maths test that morning. Without saying anything, Zhang Wei 4 pushed a pen towards me. I looked at him in surprise and said thank you. He just nodded slightly and went back to his work. That small action changed my 5 of him.

I decided to try to know him better. During lunch break, I asked him what he liked to do after school. His face 6 up and he said, "I like drawing!" He took out a notebook full of beautiful sketches. There were drawings of animals, buildings, and cartoon characters. I was amazed. "These are 7!" I said.

From that day on, we started talking more. I found out that Zhang Wei was not unfriendly at all. He was just shy and did not know how to start a 8. Once he felt comfortable, he was actually very funny and kind. He taught me how to draw simple cartoons, and I helped him with his English.

By the end of the term, Zhang Wei and I had become great friends. I learned an important 9: you should never judge a person too quickly. Sometimes the quietest people have the most 10 hearts.
