中考英语完形填空：图书馆的老管理员

完形填空原文

There is a small library near my school. It does not look special from the outside — just an old building with a wooden door. But inside, it is full of 1 waiting to be discovered. And the person who makes the library truly special is Mr. Zhou, the old librarian.

Mr. Zhou has worked at the library for over thirty years. He knows where every book is, even without checking the computer. If you tell him what kind of story you like, he can 2 the perfect book for you in seconds. He once told me, "Books are like friends. I have lived with them for so long that I know each one by heart."

I started visiting the library in the fourth grade. At that time, I was not a good reader. I found most books 3 and could not focus for more than ten minutes. Mr. Zhou noticed this and did not push me. Instead, he handed me a thin picture book about a brave little dog. "Try this one," he said. "I think you will like it."

He was right. I 4 the book in one afternoon and immediately wanted more. Mr. Zhou then gave me another book, slightly longer and more challenging. Step by step, he guided me from picture books to chapter books, and finally to novels. He always chose books that matched my 5 perfectly — not too easy and not too hard.

Mr. Zhou also started a "reading corner" every Saturday morning. Children from the neighbourhood would sit on colourful cushions while he read stories aloud. He used different 6 for different characters, which made the stories come alive. Even the naughty kids sat quietly and listened.

Last month, I heard that Mr. Zhou was going to 7. He was already sixty-five. The news made me feel both happy and sad — happy for him because he deserved a rest, but sad because the library would not be the same 8 him.

On his last day, many people came to say goodbye. Former students, parents, and neighbours all brought flowers and thank-you cards. Mr. Zhou's eyes were red, but he smiled and said, "I am not leaving the books. I am just reading them at home now."

I gave him a card I had made myself. Inside, I wrote: "Thank you for teaching me to love reading. You did not just lend me books — you 9 my world."

Mr. Zhou is retired now, but his influence lives on. Every time I pick up a book, I think of him. He showed me that a good librarian does not just organise books — he connects people with 10 that can change their lives.
