中考英语完形填空：探望生病的同学

完形填空原文

My classmate Zhang Hao had been absent from school for a whole week. Our teacher told us that he had broken his leg in a bicycle accident and was resting at home. Everyone in the class felt 1 for him, so we decided to visit him on Saturday.

We collected some money and bought a basket of fruit, a box of chocolates, and a get-well card. Each of us wrote a short 2 on the card. I wrote, "Get well soon! We miss you in class." Li Mei drew a funny cartoon of our teacher on the card, which made everyone laugh.

On Saturday morning, five of us took the bus to Zhang Hao's home. His mother opened the door and looked 3 to see us. "Zhang Hao will be so happy," she said. "He has been feeling down lately."

We found Zhang Hao sitting on the sofa with his leg in a cast. He looked pale but smiled brightly when he saw us. "I thought you guys had forgotten about me!" he joked. We sat around him and started talking about everything that had happened at school during the 4.

We told him about the new English teacher, the basketball match between our class and Class Three, and the funny thing that happened in the chemistry lab. Zhang Hao listened carefully and laughed at all the right moments. I could see that our visit was already making him feel 5.

Then we gave him the gifts. His eyes lit up when he read the card. He was especially amused by Li Mei's cartoon. "This really looks like Mr. Wang!" he said, holding up the card for his mother to see. She laughed too and thanked us for being such good 6.

Before we left, Zhang Hao asked about the homework. We promised to bring him copies of the notes and help him 7 up when he returned. "You don't have to worry about falling behind," I said. "We will make sure you are ready."

On the way home, I thought about how a simple visit could mean so much to someone. Zhang Hao had been feeling lonely and bored at home. Our visit gave him something he really needed — the feeling that people 8 about him.

The next Monday, our teacher praised us for visiting Zhang Hao. She said, "Taking care of each other is what makes a class a 9." I agreed. After all, friendship is not just about having fun together. It is about being there for each other, especially during 10 times.
