中考英语完形填空：暑假支教日记

完形填空原文

This summer, I joined a volunteer teaching programme in a mountain village. For two weeks, a group of senior high students and I taught English, art, and music to the children there. It was one of the most 1 experiences of my life.

The village was far from the city. We took a bus for six hours and then walked for another hour along a narrow dirt road. When we finally arrived, the village head welcomed us warmly. The school was small — just three classrooms and a tiny playground. But the children's eyes were full of curiosity and 2.

I was responsible for teaching English to the younger group, aged seven to ten. Most of them had never had a real English lesson before. They could not even say "hello" 3. But they were eager to learn. On the first day, I taught them the alphabet and some simple greetings. They repeated after me with big smiles on their faces.

Teaching was not easy. I had no textbooks or projector — only a blackboard and coloured chalk. I had to think of creative ways to make the lessons 4. I used songs, games, and hand-drawn pictures. The children loved the games, especially "Simon Says." They would laugh and jump around the classroom, and I could see them learning without even 5 it.

The living conditions were basic. We slept in sleeping bags on the classroom floor and cooked our own meals. The water came from a well, and there was no internet. At first, I found it hard to 6 to life without my phone. But after a few days, I stopped thinking about it. I realised that face-to-face conversations and outdoor activities could be just as enjoyable.

What touched me the most was the children's 7. On our last day, they gave us handmade gifts — paper flowers, drawn portraits, and tiny wooden carvings. One girl handed me a bracelet made of red string and said, "Teacher, please come back next year." I had to hold back my 8.

The experience changed my view of the world. I used to take many things for granted — clean water, electricity, fast internet. Now I understand how 9 some families still are, and I feel a stronger desire to help.

I plan to volunteer again next summer. Teaching those children taught me something I could never learn from a textbook: that giving is more 10 than receiving.
