中考英语完形填空：学剪纸

完形填空原文

My grandmother is good at paper-cutting. She can cut beautiful patterns of flowers, animals, and Chinese characters. Last week, she offered to teach me this traditional skill. I was excited to learn.

Grandmother said that paper-cutting required 1 and a steady hand. "You cannot rush," she told me. "Each cut must be careful and precise." She gave me a pair of small scissors and some red paper. In Chinese culture, red paper is often used for paper-cutting because it symbolises good 2.

We started with a simple shape — a circle. I folded the paper in half, then in half again. Grandmother showed me where to cut. I tried to follow her instructions, but my first circle looked more like a square with rounded corners. She laughed kindly and said, "Practice makes perfect."

After a few more tries, I managed to cut a proper circle. Grandmother praised me and said we could move on to something more 3. She taught me how to cut a "double happiness" character. This character is often used at weddings. We had to fold the paper in a special way and cut along the lines she had drawn.

I found the character much harder than the circle. My scissors kept slipping, and I accidentally cut through the wrong part. The paper tore. I felt 4, but Grandmother said it was normal. "Even experienced cutters make mistakes. The important thing is to learn from them."

I took a new piece of paper and tried again. This time, I cut more slowly. I paid attention to every small movement. When I finished, I unfolded the paper. There was the "double happiness" character! It was not perfect, but it was recognisable. I was so 5 that I ran to show my parents.

Grandmother said that paper-cutting has a long history in China. It dates back more than two thousand years. In the past, people used it to decorate windows and doors during festivals. Today, it is still a popular 6 art form.

She gave me a book with many paper-cutting patterns. "Practise these at home," she said. "When you come back next week, we can try more difficult designs." I thanked her and promised to 7.

That night, I practised cutting a butterfly. It took me almost an hour. The wings were tricky because they had many small details. But when I finally finished, the butterfly looked lovely. I stuck it on my bedroom window. The sunlight shone through the cuts, creating beautiful 8 on the wall.

Learning paper-cutting has made me appreciate Chinese traditional culture more. Every cut connects me to the past. I hope to master this skill and pass it on to others someday. Traditional arts should not be 9. They are a precious part of our heritage that we must 10 and protect.
