中考英语完形填空：学包饺子

完形填空原文

During the Spring Festival, my grandmother taught me how to make dumplings. She has been making them for over fifty years. "Making dumplings together is an important family tradition," she said. "When you grow up, you will 1 this skill to your children too."

First, we prepared the filling. We used minced pork, Chinese cabbage, ginger, and green onions. Grandma said the key was to mix everything well and add the right amount of salt and soy sauce. I helped her chop the vegetables. My cuts were not as 2 as hers, but she said that practice would make me better.

Then we made the dough. Grandma mixed flour and water until it became a smooth ball. She showed me how to roll the dough into a long snake shape, then cut it into small pieces. I took a piece and tried to roll it into a round wrapper with a rolling pin. My first few wrappers were too thick in the 3 and too thin at the edges. Grandma laughed and said, "That's normal for beginners. The centre should be slightly thicker to hold the filling."

The hardest part was folding the dumpling. I put some filling in the centre of the wrapper, then folded it in half and 4 the edges together. My first dumplings looked messy. Some had too much filling and burst open when we cooked them. Grandma said, "Don't put too much. It's better to start with less and add more as you get better."

We made over a hundred dumplings. Grandma boiled half of them and fried the other half. When they were ready, the whole family sat down to eat. My father said my dumplings tasted 5, even though they looked a bit odd. I felt proud. Grandma put one of my best-looking dumplings on top of the plate. "We always 6 the first one to the kitchen god," she explained. "It's an old custom."

Making dumplings with Grandma that day was a special 7. I learned not only a skill but also the meaning of family traditions. Food brings people together. When we cook and eat together, we share more than a meal — we share love and 8. I hope to make dumplings with my own family one day and pass on the recipes and stories. As Grandma said, some things are too important to 9. They connect the past and the future, and they keep our culture 10.
