中考英语完形填空：认识新同桌

完形填空原文

When the new term started, our teacher rearranged the seating. I was placed next to a girl I had never spoken to before. Her name was Wang Mei. She was quiet and always kept to 1. I wondered if we would get along.

On the first day, I tried to start a conversation. "Hi, I'm Li Hua. Nice to meet you," I said. She looked up from her book and gave me a small 2. "Nice to meet you too," she replied softly. Then she went back to reading. I felt a little disappointed, but I did not give up.

Over the next few days, I noticed that Wang Mei was very 3 in class. She took careful notes and always answered the teacher's questions correctly. However, she rarely talked to anyone during breaks. She would sit at her desk, either reading or drawing in a small notebook.

One afternoon, I accidentally saw her drawings. They were 4 — beautiful sketches of animals, flowers and landscapes. "Wow, these are amazing!" I said. Her face turned red, but I could tell she was pleased. "Thank you. I've been drawing since I was little," she said. That was the longest sentence she had said to me.

From that day on, we began to talk more. I learned that Wang Mei was not unfriendly — she was just 5. She found it hard to start conversations with people she did not know well. But once she felt comfortable, she was actually very warm and 6.

We started helping each other with our studies. She was excellent at maths and science, while I was better at English and Chinese. We would 7 our knowledge during breaks and study time. This arrangement benefited both of us, and our grades improved.

Wang Mei also taught me to draw. I was terrible at first — my cat looked like a potato. She laughed and said, "Everyone starts somewhere. Just keep 8." With her patient guidance, my drawings slowly got better. Drawing became a hobby I truly enjoyed.

By the end of the month, Wang Mei and I had become close friends. I realised that first 9 can be misleading. Someone who seems cold and distant might actually be kind and talented. You just need to take the time to get to know them.

Our teacher once said, "A good deskmate is a treasure." I completely 10 with her. I am lucky to have Wang Mei as my deskmate and friend.
