中考英语完形填空：学做月饼

完形填空原文

Before the Mid-Autumn Festival this year, our school organised a special activity — making mooncakes by hand. The cooking teacher, Mrs. Huang, would teach us the traditional method. I had never made mooncakes before and was very 1 to try.

On the day of the activity, we gathered in the school kitchen. Mrs. Huang had prepared all the ingredients on the tables: flour, sugar, oil, and various 2 such as red bean paste, lotus seed paste and salted egg yolks. She also brought out wooden moulds with beautiful patterns carved on them.

Mrs. Huang first demonstrated the process step by step. She mixed the flour with sugar and oil to make the dough. "The dough must be soft but not sticky," she explained. "If you add too much oil, it will fall 3. If you add too little, it will be too dry." I watched carefully and took mental notes.

Next came the filling. She took a small ball of red bean paste, placed it in the centre of a flattened piece of dough, and carefully 4 the dough around it. "Make sure there are no holes, or the filling will leak out during baking," she warned. Then she pressed the ball into the mould and gently tapped it out. A perfectly shaped mooncake appeared, with a 5 flower pattern on top.

Now it was our turn. I rolled up my sleeves and started working. The dough felt strange in my hands — smooth and slightly oily. My first attempt was a disaster. The dough was too thick on one side and too 6 on the other. When I pressed it into the mould, the pattern was uneven. Mrs. Huang came over and said, "Don't worry. It takes practice. Try to 7 the dough evenly."

I tried again, this time more carefully. My second mooncake was much better, though still not as good as Mrs. Huang's. By my fourth attempt, I had gotten the hang of it. I made mooncakes with different fillings and even 8 to make one with a salted egg yolk in the centre. That was the hardest type because the yolk was fragile and easy to break.

After we finished, Mrs. Huang baked all the mooncakes in the oven. The 9 smell filled the entire building. When the mooncakes were done, they looked golden and professional. I could hardly believe I had made them myself.

I took my mooncakes home and shared them with my family. My grandmother said they tasted just like the ones she used to make when she was young. That was the best 10 I could have received.
