中考英语完形填空：帮助转学生

完形填空原文

A new student joined our class last week. His name was Zhang Wei, and he had just moved to our city from a small town in Yunnan. He looked nervous and did not talk to anyone on his first day. I could tell he was feeling 1.

During the lunch break, I noticed Zhang Wei sitting alone in the corner of the canteen. He was eating quietly and staring at his plate. I remembered how I had felt when I transferred to a new school two years ago — scared, lonely and 2. I decided to go over and talk to him.

"Hi, I'm Li Hua. Would you like to sit with us?" I asked, pointing to my group of friends. He looked 3 for a moment, then smiled and said, "Sure, thank you." He picked up his tray and followed me to our table.

My friends were welcoming. They asked Zhang Wei about his hometown, his hobbies and his favourite subjects. He told us that he loved nature and had often gone hiking in the 4 near his old home. "The scenery there is amazing," he said, his eyes lighting up. "I miss it sometimes." We could hear a touch of homesickness in his voice.

Over the next few days, I tried to help Zhang Wei 5 to his new school. I showed him where the library, the sports hall and the teachers' offices were. I also introduced him to other classmates. Some of them became his friends quickly, especially those who shared his interest in outdoor 6.

The biggest challenge for Zhang Wei was the coursework. The teaching pace here was faster than at his old school, and he struggled with maths and English. I offered to study with him after school. We would meet in the library and go through the difficult problems together. He was a fast 7 and caught up within a few weeks.

One day, Zhang Wei brought a bag of dried wild mushrooms from Yunnan. "My mother sent these from home," he said. "They are a 8 in our town. Please take some as a thank-you gift." I was touched by his thoughtfulness.

By the end of the month, Zhang Wei had become a popular member of our class. He was no longer the quiet boy sitting alone. He participated actively in class discussions and even 9 for the school basketball team.

Helping Zhang Wei made me realise that a small act of kindness can make a huge 10 in someone's life. All it takes is a warm smile and a simple "Would you like to join us?"
