主题：气象知识 (Weather Knowledge)

一、题目

Understanding weather is not just for scientists. Farmers, pilots, and ordinary travelers all depend on forecasts (1) _____ (plan) their days.

Water vapor rises from oceans and lakes, forms clouds, and later falls as rain or snow. When warm air meets cold air, storms may develop quickly. Last summer, our camping trip was canceled (2) _____ there was a sudden typhoon warning.

Meteorologists use satellites, radar, and computer models (3) _____ (predict) changes. They measure wind speed, air pressure, and humidity. Still, weather can be (4) _____ (predict) than we wish — a sunny morning might turn into a rainy afternoon.

Climate change has made some patterns harder to read. In northern regions, winters have grown (5) _____ (mild) in recent decades, while heavy rain hits southern cities more often.

In science class, we built simple instruments: a bottle barometer and a wind vane. Our teacher asked us (6) _____ (record) temperature at the same time each day for two weeks. The line graph we drew looked like a heartbeat.

Knowing basic weather signs also helps outdoors. Dark clouds moving fast often mean rain is near; a red sky at sunset may promise fine weather (7) _____ the next morning.

If you plan a hike, check the forecast and carry a light raincoat even (8) _____ the sky looks clear. Safety always comes first.

I used to think weather talk was small talk, (9) _____ now I see it connects us to the whole planet.

The more I learn about clouds and winds, (10) _____ more curious I become about the sky above my head.
